WWIII Just Ahead!

The U.S. State Department has begun telling Americans they should "LEAVE RUSSIA IMMEDIATELY."

The United States Embassy in Moscow has released a notice saying "U.S. citizens residing or travelling in Russia should depart immediately. Exercise increased caution due to the risk of wrongful detentions. Do not travel to Russia" – U.S. embassy in Moscow.

This is a tripwire. This is what the U.S. does when it knows military action (or Terrorist Attack) is planned against a specific country.

In fact, the notice specifically mentions terrorism by saying "Terrorist groups, both transnational and local terrorist organizations, and individuals inspired by extremist ideology continue plotting possible attacks in Russia. Terrorists may attack with little or no warning, targeting tourist locations, transportation hubs and systems, markets/shopping malls, local government facilities, hotels, clubs, restaurants, places of worship, parks, major sporting and cultural events, educational institutions, airports, and other public areas."

This has led Russian Authorities to conclude the U.S. is planning actual Terrorist attacks inside Russia -- as was done in Syria.

All-in-all, today's notice is among the worst developments possible for the situation. War approaches. Prepare.

UPDATE 9:17 AM EST --

Andrey Sushentsov: Here's eight reasons why the US has no interest in pushing for peace in Ukraine

Washington's priority is to contain Russia and how the fighting ends for Kiev is a sideshow to the main objective.

FILE PHOTO. U.S. President Joe Biden (R) welcomes President of Ukraine Volodymyr Zelensky to the White House on December 21, 2022 in Washington, DC.

Andrey Sushentsov, Valdai Club program director stated:

It now appears that the U.S. is not even remotely interested in supporting a peaceful resolution to the Ukrainian conflict, preferring to see the military campaign continue. Overall, strategic planning in Washington gives little thought to the parameters for ending the crisis: Whether Ukraine will remain within its current borders, lose its territories or disappear altogether.

Despite mounting casualties and the destruction of Ukraine's military, appetite for military action has not diminished, neither in Kiev nor in Washington. Many international experts rightly identify the U.S. as the key player in a large coalition advocating for continued hostilities in Ukraine. In less than a year of crisis, Kiev has exhausted its own military resources and the means to replace them, and is totally dependent on external assistance.

Though the U.S. is taking the lead in coordinating and strategizing support from the West, it would be wrong to equate Ukrainian and American interests. While continuing to pay lip service to Kiev's political demands, Washington is carefully assessing the right moment to initiate negotiations. The need for diplomatic efforts to resolve the conflict has been increasingly emphasized by U.S. military leaders, most notably the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Mark Milley. The idea continues to circulate in the British press that the American tactic is to escalate the conflict in order to later de-escalate it: to pressure Russia with a wave of large-scale deliveries of military equipment and to put Kiev in a more favorable negotiating position.

However, it cannot be overlooked that the continuation of the military crisis in Ukraine is in line with U.S. military and political interests. There are a total of eight arguments suggesting that the Americans intend to prolong this conflict.

First, there is the relative weakening of Russia, which has had to devote considerable resources to eliminating the military threat from Ukraine, as well as to achieving its political objectives of securing equal status in post-Cold War European security architecture. The Western media narrative that Russia is on the verge of defeat, while far from reality, gives the impression that all the West needs to do so is adopt a wait-and-see attitude. The lack of decisive Russian military victories leads to the perception that Ukraine is winning.

Second, the U.S. has a vested interest in breaking up EU-Russian energy cooperation. This has developed over many decades, beginning during the Cold War. The sabotage of the Nord Stream pipelines, apparently conducted with the assistance of another NATO state, was the culmination of a long-term American strategy to dismantle the extensive links between Moscow and Key West European economies. The Americans want to shift European energy consumption away from Russia and create a more difficult environment for broader European industry, so that American goods face less competition, thus strengthening their own position.

Third, the U.S. wants to eliminate any impulse for strategic autonomy among EU states. The Ukrainian crisis provides a golden opportunity for this, as the U.S. and its allies in Eastern Europe have managed to create a moment of moral panic in the information space, preventing any reflection on the causes and consequences of the crisis. Strategic decisions on arms transfers are being taken under pressure from the media and a radicalized section of the public, without any analysis of the consequences. Leaders and elites, who might have been able to reflect with detachment and sobriety on the consequences of the slide of EU-Russia relations into a deep crisis, are now outnumbered and essentially voiceless.

Fourth, the U.S. does not want to see the defeat of Ukraine, into which much financial, political and symbolic capital has been invested over the past year. In the eyes of the West, Ukraine is its "champion". The old narrative of European civilization struggling against the barbaric East, going back to the days of ancient Greece and its confrontation with the Persian hordes, is being played out here. Ukraine's defeat would be a sensitive symbolic defeat for the West and would leave an "open wound" in the minds of many intellectuals.

Fifth, the U.S. has not retreated from the ideological imperative to defend what it interprets as "freedom". In the situation around Ukraine, there is a Manichean presentation of the struggle for "freedom against unfreedom". Washington also sees this ideological imperative manifest in the domestic situation in Ukraine, which of course is only possible if you look at the political processes in Kiev "through your fingers". By playing along with this narrative, Vladimir Zelensky's government seeks to present itself to the West in such ideological categories.

The sixth U.S. objective is to encourage Western Europe to remilitarize. Washington is aware that prolonged military competition is not possible using American forces alone. Moreover, the U.S. is conscious of the growing threat from China and realizes that its resources will soon be diverted to a confrontation in the Pacific. In the European theater, Washington is therefore looking for ways to strengthen the EU's military-industrial complex so that national defense budgets can be raised to at least 2 percent of GDP.

Seventh, the U.S. seeks to consolidate its European allies around a platform of fighting its "rising" adversaries such as Russia, China and Iran. Here, the U.S. is trying to be resourceful in building coalitions willing to produce and sell expensive, high-tech weapons.

Eighth, the U.S. is also pursuing its own re-industrialization through Ukraine. The expansion of the military-industrial complex is seen as an important goal for America. After the Cold War, it was reoriented to produce a limited number of high-tech products, whereas modern conventional warfare requires the large-scale production of relatively inexpensive generic artillery, tank and aircraft systems.

All this makes the U.S. extremely uninterested in working for a peaceful solution to the conflict in the short term. The Americans believe that time is on their side and that the eight objectives listed above will be achieved. This makes their strategy rather flexible and demonstrates that their priority is to contain Russia rather than secure the future security and prosperity of Ukraine.

HAARP

Brooks Agnew shared 2/12/23 on X²Radio a secret that few are not even aware of about concerning HAARP technology, and if anyone should know it would be Brooks Agnew. Brooks Agnew once did deep penetrating radar seismic testing for Arco Oil decades ago researching for pools of oil. Brooks said:

"I don't think there are many people who missed the series of events in Turkey. On February 4th, the USS Nimitz arrived in Turkey. It carries more than 100 cruise missiles and a special electromagnetic weapon known as HAARP. This model is not intended for weather control. It is intended as a tectonic weapon. If the geological faults are under tension, which they almost always are, HAARP has the capability of finding and inducing resonant waves that will build up in energy over a series of hours or days until that tension is suddenly released."

"The same day the USS Nimitz arrived, Turkish Interior Minister Suleyman Soylu issued an angry statement on to U.S. Ambassador to Ankara Jeffry Flake, demanding: "Take your dirty hands of Turkiye."

According to Haberturk newspaper, Soylu added: "Every U.S. ambassador who arrives in Turkiye is hurrying to find out how to make a coup possible in Turkiye."

Addressing current U.S. Ambassador Flake, Soylu asserted: "I address the US ambassador from here. I know the journalists you made write articles. Take your dirty hands off Turkiye. I'm being very clear."

In other accusations to the U.S. ambassador, the Turkish interior minister stated: "I very well know how you would like to create strife in Turkiye. Take your grinning face off from Turkiye."

"Every U.S. ambassador asks themselves how they can harm Turkiye. It has been one of Turkiye's greatest misfortunes for years. They gather other ambassadors and try to give them advice. They do the same in Europe as U.S. embassies run Europe," Soylu noted in response to the U.S. Embassy's recent warning to its citizens in Turkiye against the danger of terrorist attacks in Istanbul. This came in a statement published by Western countries' embassies. Some countries issued separate statements but relied on the direct U.S. warning.

"The Global Media Empire would have us believe that the Interior Minister was referring to a U.S. Embassy's statement was issued last week in light of radical right-wing individuals burning copies of Qurans in Europe. It was not what he was referring to. He was referring to the arrival of the USS Nimitz to use HAARP against them."

"Western countries had been secretly briefed on what was coming, so they immediately closed their consulates in Istanbul for "security reasons" and in anticipation of the attack including Germany, the Netherlands and the UK. On Friday, Foreign Minister Mevlut Cavusoglu considered some Western countries' decision to temporarily shut their consulates without discussing it with Ankara as "deliberate".

"Why did they close their doors? They say there's a terrorist threat. Now if there's a terrorist threat, shouldn't they – especially if they are allies – tell us where this threat originated from?" Cavusoglu asked.

"For weeks, the WEF has been terroristically threatening Turkey that if they did not stop trying to broker peace in Ukraine, they would suffer a terror attack."

"Cavusoglu denied any concrete information-sharing with Turkiye by the Western countries, accusing them of only thinking of their own interests. He added that the ambassadors of these countries were summoned to inform them of this."

"These incidents caused diplomatic tensions between Turkiye and certain European countries, especially Sweden, which witnessed the burning of a Quran in front of the Turkish embassy. The latter stopped a tripartite meeting to discuss Stockholm joining the NATO alliance."

"I know many of you have seen the videos of the attack. I showed them to you last Wednesday. Thousands of posts have gone viral with the excerpt from my demonstration of HAARP in the 1997 documentary called Holes in Heaven. I never thought when I made that documentary, directed by Wendy Robbins that it would have been seen by so many people. I think you for that, but then everything we do will eventually affect the universe. I am glad that the world is now aware that there is such a weapon."

"It breaks my heart that more than 20 thousand innocent people (now at 35,000+) have been killed by cracking the ground open from Turkey to Syria without leaving so much as a fingerprint. Civilian and news cameras captured the clear night sky igniting with electrical discharges as HAARP reached its peak power. Within seconds, the ground began violently shaking while thousands of buildings came crashing down on the people. The crack that opened up is 650 feet wide and more than 100 feet deep and stretches all the way to Syria."

"The news actors are trying to make us believe that triggering an earthquake is impossible to prove. You are wrong, Joe Biden. We have the proof. You will burn in hell for what you have done. Turkey is no longer our ally, thanks to you. There are dozens of nuclear warheads in Turkey that are now in the hands of a leader who is red with rage right now. Joe, you have put America in harm's way just to cover your crimes and to follow the orders of the Global Syndicate."

The report by Brooks Agnew on X²Radio raises serious concerns because of what was stored in the area of the recent earthquake, which happens to be 50 nuclear bombs. As the Syrian crisis pits Turkish troops against former U.S.-allied Kurdish forces, Pentagon officials have been reviewing plans to remove 50 nuclear bombs stored at a U.S air base in Turkey.

A congressional directive to the Pentagon to quickly assess alternative homes for U.S. "personnel and assets" currently stationed at Incirlik Air Base is part of a broader bipartisan bill, still being debated, that proposes sanctions against Turkey. President Donald Trump has been forced to issue public reassurances that the weapons are secure.

During the Cold War, the U.S. stationed B-61 nuclear bombs in Turkey, among other NATO countries. Formally, the U.S. controlled the weapons during peacetime, but the host countries' forces trained and equipped planes so they could drop the bombs with U.S. support in the case of war. The idea was to deter Soviet ground forces and reassure U.S. allies by making clear that the U.S. would be willing to risk nuclear war to block a Soviet invasion of a country hosting the bombs.

In addition, in the years before the U.S. developed intercontinental ballistic missiles, they presented a way for NATO to demonstrate it could act quickly to respond to a Soviet attack.

The 50 bombs still at Incirlik Air Base, in southern Turkey – and others in Belgium, Germany, Italy and the Netherlands – are the last nuclear remnants of that Cold War strategy. The U.S. began pulling nuclear bombs out of NATO countries after the Cold War ended, and since 2000 has removed 40 bombs from Turkey.

Two decades ago, the Turkish Air Force stopped equipping its planes to drop B-61s. Now the bombs at Incirlik could only be used if U.S. pilots first flew nuclear-weapon-capable planes there to load them up. The bombs were left in Turkey even after a 2016 coup attempt raised serious concerns about their safety. After that event, the U.S. Defense and Energy departments began planning how to remove them – but didn't actually bring them back to the U.S.

How secure are they?

U.S. nuclear weapons are stored in hardened bunkers, protected by electronic systems and heavily armed U.S. troops. The Pentagon has recently reinforced both of those methods of defense.

The bombs themselves also require 12-digit codes to activate them, however, those protections are only strong enough to delay unauthorized use, rather than actually prevent it. If those barriers were overcome, U.S. forces could disable the weapons by destroying electrical components or detonating their chemical high explosive without causing a nuclear release. In the worst case, they could blow up the weapons or the facilities at Incirlik.

Still the U.S. procedures are not designed to prevent skilled attacks or sabotage, especially from an ally. With enough time, Turkey could make use of the nuclear material – if not to detonate in an actual nuclear explosion, then to “release disastrous and deadly radiation.”

What's wrong with removing them?

Taking the weapons out of Turkey carries some physical risks. The bombs aren't terribly heavy – roughly 700 pounds each – but moving nuclear material requires significant security. In addition, the Turkish government would have to help – or at least not stand in the way – of landing transport planes or sending cargo convoys by land or sea.

The greater risks are likely to be political. Those concerns have discouraged previous U.S. administrations from removing the bombs, even though Turkey's defense community isn't particularly interested in using them.

One U.S. concern is that Turkey could perceive the move as a push away from NATO. That could lead to Turkey seeking closer ties with Russia. In addition, pulling the nuclear weapons out of Turkey could prompt requests to remove other bombs from Belgium, the Netherlands and Germany, where they are publicly unpopular.

A new worry just arose, when Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan recently mused whether perhaps Turkey should leave the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and develop its own nuclear arsenal. U.S. officials have long feared that pulling the American nuclear bombs out could encourage Erdogan to try to turn that bluster into reality.

Unintentionally, Trump's efforts to provide reassurance may have made this challenge more difficult. The presence of B-61s in the five countries is an open secret, confirmed by independent observers. But it has nonetheless been NATO policy not to acknowledge the deployments, giving local politicians and the U.S. a shield from parliamentary and public oversight.

By publicly confirming that the weapons were in Turkey, Trump had raised the political stakes should he try to remove them, and made it more difficult for the United States and Turkey to strike a quiet deal to that effect.

This is the second bombshell that you have only recently learned about the U.S. in as many weeks concerning the acts of war being committed by the Biden administration. The first was the blowing up of the Nord Stream pipeline. In case you did not read it, this is the amended facts issued by Sy Hersch, who authored the book that revealed Israel's 'The Samson Option' in 1991. Seymour Hersch posted last week a story on how the U.S. destroyed the Nord Stream pipelines. Below is the full article including the video link to Monkey Werx which shows the live-stream radar activity of the U.S. aircraft attacking the Nord Stream pipeline. This evidence in a court tribunal is sufficient to convict the U.S. of committing an Act of War.

This morning's news on Apple© Siri News headlined the title, "The U.S. Needs Another 9/11!" That might be an understatement given that journalist Sy Hersch dropped his bombshell that the CIA/U.S. Navy blew up the Nord Stream pipeline. This was an Act of War in case you do not know it.

Early on we were thinking the UK was very much involved and yet the entire operation suggested a much larger operation requiring a Navy operation like our own Navy could pull off. The commander-in-chief passing himself off as the President of the U.S. stands exposed now as 'the emperor has no clothes' and having admitted he approved the destruction of the Nord Stream pipeline, has now given reason for his impeachment ASAP. The Chinese balloon incident alone shows how easy it would have been for the Chinese to deliver an EMP attack against the U.S. Have you noticed how all the news seems to further damage the U.S. image?

Moon of Alabama said:

"Hersh's story is true. That U.S. officials deny it means nothing. Previous revelations by Hersh on domestic spying by the CIA, on the My Lai massacre, on torture at Abu Ghraib, were also denied but eventually all were proven to be true."

The story about the pipelines makes complete sense. Unfortunately there are some details that Hersh, for lack of access to the right information, gets wrong.

He writes:

Last June, the Navy divers, operating under the cover of a widely publicized mid-summer NATO exercise known as BALTOPS 22, planted the remotely triggered explosives that, three months later, destroyed three of the four Nord Stream pipelines, according to a source with direct knowledge of the operational planning.

It is unlikely that the explosives were put out while the yearly BALTOPS exercise was still ongoing. The current Wikipedia entry about it says:

A total of 14 NATO nations, including NATO partner nations Finland and Sweden, took part in the 51st BALTOPS exercise between 5 and 17 June 2022. The usual mine hunting exercise was augmented this year with experimental mine hunting unmanned underwater vehicles and the collection of environmental data sets for target recognition algorithms in conjunction with the Naval Undersea Warfare Center and Naval Information Warfare Center Pacific.

BALTOPS 2022 was shadowed by two Russian Karakurt-class corvettes.

The whole exercise took only 12 days. A lot of nations took part. Submarines were involved. The Russian's were around watching what was happening. (They like also had submarines in the wider area.)

Those are not good conditions to do a lot of secret underwater work. It was much easier to do this later, when everyone had turned back to port. The U.S. ships though did not sail home. They stayed around, did some harbor visits and eventually settled down near the island of Bornholm a few miles away from the pipelines where they started to do their work. Here is where the pipelines were hit:

The four Nord Stream pipelines, two for Nord Stream 1 and two for Nord Stream 2, are strong:

The steel pipe itself has a wall of 4.1 centimeters (1.6 inches), and it's coated with another 6-11 cm of steel-reinforced concrete. Each section of the pipe weighs 11 tonnes, which goes to 24-25 tonnes after the concrete is applied.

The pipelines are also buried into the sandy sea ground, not deep, but deep enough to prevent fishing equipment or anchors from damaging them.

To blow such pipelines takes a lot more than just putting a few pounds of C4 explosives on top of them. The pipelines had first to be dug out, must likely with pressurized water. Next explosives had to be placed all around them. Then a trigger mechanism of some kind had to be deployed and fixed on to them. Lastly the explosive laden section would have to be reburied to prevent detection or unforeseen entanglement with some external elements. All this had to be done at least four times. If I had planned the operation I probably would have gone for a total of eight explosive packages.

The whole process takes time. Unmanned submarine like vehicles were needed to carry the hundreds of kilograms of explosives and equipment. Diving time at that depth is not unlimited and there must have been a few crew changes. It probably took three to four weeks to fix the whole issue.

When I wrote about the incident I translated a German language report which Hersh had likely not found.

Here is my original translation:

Big Fleet Group From U.S. Navy Passes [German island passage] Fehmarnbelt On Wednesday morning the amphibious assault ship USS Kearsarge, escorted by the Landing Ships USS Arlington and USS Gunston Hall, was en route towards west. Previously, the ships were part of US units that took part in NATO maneuvers and called at numerous ports in Germany, Scandinavia and the Baltic States.

The "USS Kearsarge", flagship of the association and largest warship of the US Navy, which was in action in the Baltic Sea in the last 30 years, has 40 helicopters and fighter planes as well as more than 2000 soldiers on board, the escort ships about 1000. For the around 4,000 soldiers are heading back home on the east coast of the US after their six-month deployment.

The USS Kearsarge was much longer in the Baltic Sea than Hersh presumes. The explosives were put down sometime between the end of BALTOPS on June 17 and September 22, the date the USS Kearsarge passed Fehmarn to leave the Baltic Sea.

That's why Hersh errs when he later writes:

And then: Washington had second thoughts. The bombs would still be planted during BALTOPS, but the White House worried that a two-day window for their detonation would be too close to the end of the exercise, and it would be obvious that America had been involved. Instead, the White House had a new request: "Can the guys in the field come up with some way to blow the pipelines later on command?"

That window was not extended by months between the end of BALTOPS and the explosions but by a mere few days between somewhat around September 20 when the Kearsarge went on its way back home and September 27 when the pipelines exploded.

Excursion:

Since my translation some content has been added to the German piece to put it in the context of the Russian invasion. It is now dated October 21 2022 which makes no real sense. (The only archive.org copy of the piece is the changed on, saved on December 2022.)

The piece now starts with this (my translation):

Big Fleet Group From U.S. Navy Passes [German island passage] Fehmarnbelt

I don't remember that there was a sub-headline to it or some sentences about the war in Ukraine but the piece now has those:

On Thursday morning, September 22, a fleet group from the U.S. Navy passed [the German island] Fehmarn. The "USS Kearsarge" as flagship was the biggest of the war ships.

- Russian nuclear submarines and NATO units in strait of Fehmarn
- Ships sail again in western direction
- 40 helicopters and war planes on board

Fehmarn – With the Russian war of aggression against Ukraine, which began in February, and with the change in security policy it caused, with NATO entry requests by Finland and Sweden, the Baltic has become a concentration area for naval forces of Russian and NATO. This can be seen in the increasing number of war ships which have passed the strait of Fehmarn [Fehmarnbelt] during the past months. This counts for Russian nuclear submarines just as for NATO units. On Thursday morning, September 22, a fleet group of the U.S. navy passed Fehmarn.

Then follow, seemingly unchanged, the two paragraphs I had translated previously.

It is some weird editorializing to add the now leading new parts to the old small piece by a local newspaper nearly a month after it was originally published. Who initiated that?

The new part does not make sense. BALTOPS is a yearly exercise. BALTOPS 22 was the 51st one of its kind. That it was held had nothing to do with the war in Ukraine.

As far as I can tell there are and were no nuclear submarines from Russia stationed in the way too shallow Baltic Sea. The home harbors of Russia's nuclear fleets are Murmansk in the northern Kola bay for the Northern and Atlantic fleet and Rybachiy Nuclear Submarine Base on the Kamchatka peninsula for the Pacific fleet.

When a Russian nuclear submarine passes Fehmarn it is most likely one from Murmansk that takes part in the Russian fleet parade in St. Petersburg. That is like BALTOPS a yearly event. To use that for war mongering is rather stupid.

End of excursion.

What was of interest in the piece I had translated was not only the time when the U.S. ships left but also the remark that the Kearsarge was the "largest warship of the U.S. Navy" that was in action in the Baltic Sea in the last 30 years.

The Kearsarge was likely selected for purpose. The ship has a ...
... well deck, which opens to the sea through huge gates in the ship's stern. There, the cargo, troops and vehicles are loaded onto landing craft for transit to the beach. The air cushion landing craft can "fly" out of the dry well deck, or the well deck can be flooded so that conventional landing craft can float out on their way to the beach.

Usually the Kearsarge would be a too big missile target to be in the Baltic Sea. But the well deck comes in handy when one wants to test new underwater equipment or put explosives around pipelines:

In support of BALTOPS, U.S. Navy 6th Fleet partnered with U.S. Navy research and warfare centers to bring the latest advancements in unmanned underwater vehicle mine hunting technology to the Baltic Sea to demonstrate the vehicle's effectiveness in operational scenarios. Experimentation was conducted off the coast of Bornholm, Denmark, with participants from Naval Information Warfare Center Pacific, Naval Undersea Warfare Center Newport, and Mine Warfare Readiness and Effectiveness Measuring all under the direction of U.S. 6th Fleet Task Force 68.

Bornholm is of course where the pipelines were blown up.
To me the one new and surprising item in the Hersh piece is the involvement of Norwegian forces to trigger the explosions by sonar buoy signals from a P8 navy surveillance plane. I would have bet on Swedish, British or Polish involvement. But Norway makes even more sense as it will profit from the Nord Stream destruction.

Larry Johnson, an old friend of Sy Hersh, has found a video by someone who had tracked a Norwegian P-8 flying in the pipeline area shortly before the explosion. [The web site Monkey Werx SITREP is the site that tracks aviation radar activity and even noted an unusual activity on the particular day and time of around 4:30am local time when the P8 navy surveillance aircraft activated the sonar buoy signals to blow the pipelines. You can view the video at the link below on page 11.]

Unfortunately for Norway though is that its own, now increased gas exports also depend on pipelines. On the day of the Nord Stream explosions Denmark and Poland inaugurated a new pipeline that brings Norwegian gas to Poland. Russia certainly has the means to do to Norwegian pipelines what the U.S. and Norway have done to Nord Stream.

Another small quip I have with the Hersh piece is this:
Sweden had applied for membership into NATO, and had demonstrated its great skill in managing its underwater sound and magnetic sensor systems that successfully tracked Russian submarines that would occasionally show up in remote waters of the Swedish archipelago and be forced to the surface.

Most of the Russian subs the Swedish detected were never there. More than half of the many incidents were "unlikely violations", i.e. they never happened. The great Swedish skill is to scare its own population with false alarms about alleged Russian submarines near its coast:

In 1982, several of Sweden's subs, boats, and helicopters pursued one of these unidentified sources for a whole month, only to come up empty-handed. This continued for over a decade. Every time they picked up an acoustic signal they would search and find nothing but for a few bubbles on the sea's surface. Sweden was, of course, worried about the intrusions, and couldn't think why, with the Cold War now over, Russia would continue to provoke them in this manner.

But it was just farts.

"It turns out herring have a swim bladder... and this swim bladder is connected to the anal duct of the fish," Wahlberg said. "It's a very unique connection, only found in herring. So a herring can squeeze its swim bladder, and that way it can blurt out a small number of bubbles through the anal opening."

In layman's terms, they let one rip. Herrings swim in gigantic schools that can reach several square kilometers and up to 20 meters (65 feet) deep. When something near them frightens them – say, a hungry school of mackerel or a submarine on the lookout for Russian spies – they can generate a lot of gas.

To test his theory, Wahlberg bought a herring from a store and applied pressure, and sure enough, it made a sound. He took the footage to the navy personnel and played it back to them. It was a perfect match for the noise they had been hearing.

The good news was that Sweden wasn't under threat from Russia, the bad news was it had spent 10 years deploying its military in pursuit of fish farts. Since it figured out what was and wasn't fish farts, there have been zero reports of hostile intruders in Swedish waters."

Great Swedish skills. Indeed.

Moon of Alabama's information is corroborated by the web site Monkey Werks. And now back to Mr. Zelensky. [Link to Monkey Werks video below.]

As of today, February 13, 2023, the physical count of the dead in the Turkey-Syrian earth quake as passed 35,000 and counting. From these two Acts of War, "America is in free fall, both economically and militarily; and especially morally."

It's been a gradual decline for decades but as the nation unwinds things tend to move faster and we may very well have entered that final death spiral.

This is very reminiscent of ancient Rome and its far-flung empire building. Rome, like America, was busy nation building abroad while ignoring the homeland. Finally it imploded from within when it realized the barbarians were not only gathering at the gates, they were inside the gates.

Here is a list of things the Biden Regime is doing that are the opposite of what any legitimate government would do if it was heading into war with a superpower like Russia, China or, God forbid, both at the same time:

- Pushing dangerous experimental pharmaceutical products on U.S. military, first responders and healthcare personnel. China and Russia have not forced these mRNA drugs on their military personnel.
- Sending endless arms and munitions to Ukraine.
- Pushing for a global pandemic treaty that would shift sovereignty from individual nations to the United Nations World Health Organization in matters of public health and “public-health emergencies of international concern.” The new International Health Regulations, if adopted by the World Health Assembly in the last week of May, would hand over authority to the WHO to declare when such emergencies are declared and how to respond, whether with masks, lockdowns, forced injections, etc.
- Introducing transgenderism, critical race theory and other destructive, divisive elements into the U.S. military.
- Drawing down the U.S. Strategic Petroleum Reserve to dangerously low levels while continuing to push “climate change” policies of phasing out so-called “fossil fuels” that are needed to run a modern economy, let alone a war-time economy. Russia and China do not indulge the John Kerry’s and Bill Gates’s of the world. They have no problem with “fossil fuels.”
- Continuing to stoke divisions within U.S. society — racial, sexual, and religious. Just this week an FBI leaked memo shows it is targeting conservative Catholics as an “extremist” threat. Previously, we’ve seen parents who attend school board meetings, so-called “election deniers,” vaccine refusniks, and pro-life evangelicals labeled as extremists and enemies of the state in the world of fairy tales in which the DOJ and FBI operate. They should be focused on real enemies but they choose to demonize various categories of law-abiding, hard-working American families.
- Continuing to encourage business deals with China in which China buys up valuable U.S. farmland and industrial land.
- Opening the borders for terrorists and sleeper cells to enter from China, Iran, Russia and any other country that wants to send us their bad apples.

- Going after guns. If we had a legitimate government that knew war with Russia-China was on the horizon, it would be encouraging responsible citizen gun ownership rather than trying to ban these weapons.
- Not explaining to the American people that we are at war with Russia and China, at least in a proxy war and rapidly moving toward direct war with both sides escalating the conflicts. Why escalate toward war without mobilizing for war and explaining the rationale to the people?

The U.S. is repeating its play book of destroying nations through fraud since WW1. Most of the Christian community has been if not supportive of the U.S. as the policeman of democracy in the world, has embraced it; and yet that was never a mandate by our Constitutional Republic, and anyone with half a brain knows that democracy is by a simple majority, 51%. That violates the principles of the minority, 49%. We were established as a Republic, and as Benjamin Franklin once said, "so long as you can keep it!"

The country is not mobilizing. It is not uniting. And this is because we do not have a legitimate government in Washington D.C. It is a fake government run by traitors bent on seeing our nation's destruction.

This illegitimate entity that people refer to as the government, while pushing the world toward war, is not preparing for war.

The above is an ominous warning. WW3 will be nuclear and the extinction of millions if not billions. Let us plan for the worst and hope and pray for something less extreme. Ammo Up and may God bless America.

Those behind the shadowy curtain are leading the U.S. into a suicidal extinction event. God has not judged the United States of America directly. It committed suicide when it publicly acknowledged abortion as a right and when it defied God's basic gender of a man and a woman. The world laughs at the insanity of those who think they can change their gender that was determined at their birth. Fred Rogers, the late host of Mr. Rogers Neighborhood did a sketch about a boy is a boy and a girl is a girl and nothing can change that; and a few weeks ago someone found it and aired on the Internet. It went viral and the leftists went ballistic over it.

In the video, Rogers sang the first stanza: "Boys are boys from the beginning, girls are girls right from the start. Everybody's fancy, Everybody's fine. Your body's fancy and so is mine."

Another clip also resurfaced in which Fred Rogers appeared on late-night with Johnny Carson where he seemingly hinted that the song intended to teach kids about the differences of biological sexes to dispel any ideas about becoming or changing into something else.

“Sometimes children think that they might change — they might have to change after a while,” he said. “And you know, we laugh about that now, but it’s because we had that concern when we were little.”

“Yeah, because you’re really not sure and you thought maybe you’d become a girl, or a girl would become a boy, right?” Johnny Carson said in jest.

“Exactly,” responded Fred Rogers.

What the actual Fred Rogers thought of transgenderism nobody will ever know. In some ways, the resurfaced clip echoes a previous clip from woke leftist Bill Nye speaking of biological sex long before he went full-throttle pro-transgender on his Netflix series Bill Nye Saves the World.

“Inside each of our cells are these things called chromosomes, and they control whether we become a boy or a girl. Your mom has two X chromosomes in all of her cells, and your dad has one X and one Y chromosome in each of his cells...X you’re a girl, Y you’re a boy,” he said on his show.

This is not meant to frighten you, the events reveal the truth. If you are a believer in Jesus Christ, then you should have no fear. I am telling you this to remind you that the time of Jesus’ return is short. What we are experiencing now will pale in comparison to what those left behind at the Rapture will endure. Use this Blessed Hope segment as motivation to share the truth with your friends and family members who have not given their lives to Christ. As we look around, it is quite evident that the time is very short. Do it today!

There is no walking the high-wire tight rope or fence with God. There is no room for those in God’s Kingdom that want to straddle the fence. You are either for Jesus Christ or you are not! You can’t have it both ways. There will be no carnal or cafeteria Christians departing in the Rapture. The time for decision is almost up.

The very least that U.S. citizens can call for the impeachment of the senile fraud posing as Joe Biden! The call for impeachment could prolong Vladimir Putin’s response to nuke command centers in the West. Allowing the Obiden regime a “Free Pass” over his approval of committing Acts of War could easily be viewed as compliance through silence, and hence his decision to respond by releasing the “Dead Hand” policy, a former Soviet strategy of pre-emptive strike, in which all nuclear weapons are launched simultaneously.

Norwegian intelligence reports that ships of the Russian Northern Fleet are going to sea with tactical nuclear weapons on board for the first time in 30 years. Life as you know it may end within the next fifty days!

ADMIT THAT YOU ARE A SINNER.

BELIEVE THAT JESUS
PAID FOR YOUR SIN
ON THE CROSS. †

CONFESS THAT JESUS IS LORD AND CALL UPON HIM FOR SALVATION.

The clock is winding down fast and when the call comes to “Come up hither” the door will be closed and those left behind are likely to die for their faith in the final “Seven Weeks of Daniel 9:24-27!”

Blessings,
