King Charles pockets money from DEAD PEOPLE who leave no will to fund lavish lifestyle

By Derek Knauss -February 29, 2024

Thousands of people who died in a specific area of north-west England known as the Lancashire county palatine without leaving behind a will or a known next of kin have had their financial assets collected by the Duchy of Lancaster for King Charles' benefit'

More than £60m of “ownerless property” or bona vacantia (literally ‘vacant goods’ in English) has reportedly been scooped up by the duchy over the last decade, and used to finance renovations of the King’s estate which he profits from renting out.

The news, from a leaked 2020 internal policy, is despite the Duchy of Lancaster claiming funds are distributed between charitable causes.

The aforementioned palatine today covers Lancashire and the surrounding areas, branching out into Greater Manchester, Merseyside and more.

And you may already be familiar with the Duchy of Lancaster as a concept, as the chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is a government role – which is currently held by the former culture secretary, Oliver Dowden MP.

While Buckingham Palace declined to comment on ‘The Guardian’s’ findings, a spokesperson for the duchy told the outlet: “The King reaffirmed that money from bona vacantia should not benefit the privy purse, but should be used primarily to support local communities, protect the sustainability of the land and preserve public and historic properties across the Duchy of Lancaster estates.”

“This includes the restoration and repair of qualifying buildings in order to protect and preserve them for future generations.”

“The cost of administering bona vacantia and any costs associated with the upkeep of public buildings and those of architectural importance is also deducted.”

Bill Gates Pushes ‘Synthetic Butter’ for ‘General Public Consumption’

Hunter Fielding March 1, 2024

Billionaire Bill Gates has just announced the launch of his new “synthetic butter” which he claims will help stop the so-called “climate crisis” if the fake “food” is consumed by the “general public.”

Gates has invested millions of dollars into “Savor” – the company that produces the “synthetic butter.”

According to Gates, if governments around the world “remove” all animal-derived products from the food supply, they could “save the planet” from “global warming” by replacing butter with his new chemical-based “alternative.”

The Microsoft co-founder is not stopping at butter, however.

He’s also looking to replace everything where animal fat is an ingredient.

Gates has just released a new video where he claims to be eating products made from his fake butter.

The news comes amid the mounting war on the American food supply. Globalists are continuing to demonize our vital farmers as they seek to seize control of the food industry.

The new narrative from the World Economic Forum (WEF) and their well-placed politicians in global governments is that meat and dairy products are “destroying the planet.”

Conveniently, Gates has now emerged as a new synthetic fat product on the market.

Anti-Trump New York AG Declares ‘War’ On Beef

Trent Walker March 1, 2024

New York's Democratic Attorney General, Letitia James, has recently initiated legal action against JBS USA, alleging that the company has not fulfilled its commitment to achieving “Net Zero” emissions. The prosecutor, known for her efforts against former President Trump, accuses JBS, the largest beef producer globally, of contributing to the problem of global greenhouse gas emissions, which adversely affects families dealing with the ongoing climate crisis.

In her statement, James strongly criticizes the agriculture industry and asserts that beef production has the most significant greenhouse gas footprint among major food commodities. Additionally, the Attorney General claims that animal agriculture is responsible for 14.5% of worldwide greenhouse gas emissions.

James contends that JBS is failing to meet the “Net Zero” targets set for 2030 and 2040. Interestingly, she acknowledges the challenges faced by JBS in achieving these goals due to the extensive scale of its beef production operations worldwide:

“As families continue to face the daily impacts of the climate crisis, they are willing to spend more of their hard-earned money on products from brands that are better for the environment,” James said in a statement.

“When companies falsely advertise their commitment to sustainability, they are misleading consumers and endangering our planet.”

“JBS USA’s greenwashing exploits the pocketbooks of everyday Americans and the promise of a healthy planet for future generations,” she added.

“My office will always ensure that companies do not abuse the environment and the trust of hardworking consumers for profit.”

The legal action received praise from state Democrats and prominent environmental organizations such as Earthjustice, Mighty Earth, Friends of the Earth U.S., Citizens Campaign for the Environment, and Stand Earth.

“While it is critical for every company to reduce its climate change impact, JBS would need to implement enormous operational changes to achieve this goal; However, JBS is doing very little and is not taking anywhere close to the steps that would be required.”

In her declaration and legal action, James highlighted multiple occurrences where JBS and its executives made commitments to diminish the company’s ecological footprint. Furthermore, she affirmed that the company has recognized the growing concern among consumers regarding sustainable products.

“JBS takes its commitment to a more sustainable future for agriculture very seriously,” JBS spokesperson Nikki Richardson said statement. “We disagree with the action taken today by the New York Attorney General’s office.”

“JBS will continue to partner with farmers, ranchers, and our food system partners around the world to help feed a growing population while using fewer resources and reducing agriculture’s environmental impact,” she continued.

DHS DISCRIMINATES AGAINST BIOMETRICS REFUSERS, ROLLS OUT BILL GATES' DIGITAL ID THROUGH TSA

MARCH 1, 2024 PUBLIUS

Two years after Canadian truckers protested mandates for vaccines whose safety and effectiveness is now hotly debated, technology is being quietly rolled out, without opposition from Congress, which would have allowed World Economic Forum “Young Global Leader” Justin Trudeau to shut down the truckers’ and supporters’ bank accounts with the flip of a switch in 2022.

The WEF, an unelected billionaire’s club founded by HRH Prince Charles and Klaus Schwab, has made no secret of its desire for totalitarian society controls on the unwashed masses. In his book, The Fourth Industrial Revolution, Schwab wrote:

“Any package, pallet or container can now be equipped with a sensor, transmitter or radio frequency identification (RFID) tag that allows a company to track where it is as it moves through the supply chain—how it is performing, how it is being used, and so on....In the near future, similar monitoring systems will also be applied to the movement and tracking of people.”

As it were, Trudeau was forced to undertake the cumbersome legal process of declaring a “state of emergency,” then obtaining court orders to unleash police action on protesters’ finances. Not only the truckers, but anyone who had donated to the truckers, or who was seen in the vicinity giving them food, or who donated to their wildly popular GoFundMe page.

Trudeau was road-testing a new form of totalitarian controls beyond old-fashioned police head-busting, which also was deployed. In the name of “protecting public health” with vaccines which are now under fire in many nations’ parliaments, in lawsuits, and from thousands of censored doctors and scientists: financial warfare.

Now the Department of Homeland Security TSA is officially discriminating between people who surrender personal biometric data such as face recognition selfies, and people who have thus far declined. The technology is digital ID, which was pioneered by Bill Gates and his foundation and is promoted as a kind-hearted effort to extend “inclusivity” to poor people who cannot open bank accounts, or avail themselves of government services.

Unreported in the mainstream media, in March and April of 2020 Gates funded the British professor, Neil Ferguson, who wrote the paper, “Report 9,” on which governments based “lockdown” decrees. Also unreported, Gates was a key funder of the so-called WHO Solidarity Trials, which overdosed COVID patients with hydroxychloroquine in order to that the drug was useless or worse in the treatment of COVID.

There has been no outcry demanding digital ID, as people have been living without bank accounts, and have been receiving government services around the world fine in the past.

What universal digital ID would be very good at doing, however, is identifying troublemakers, i.e. protesters of any ilk, and shutting them off without a penny with any need for messy court orders. That is because such IDs will eventually link to everything, if we allow it, including bank accounts.

The system would hand the Trudeaus of the world their wildest dream.

BiometricUpdate.com reports on Feb. 28, 2024:

The U.S Transportation Security Administration is advancing face biometrics checks for members of its PreCheck program in partnership with airlines.

The implications of the new TSA PreCheck Touchless ID service for Clear and its membership-based airport biometrics service are unclear.

Passengers can opt into the process by submitting selfie biometrics through United's mobile app."...The agency has expanded its acceptance of mobile driver's licenses and other forms of digital ID, and intends to go further this year. TSA is an agency of the Department of Homeland Security.

In 2020, after the World Health Organization's declaration of a COVID pandemic, Bill Gates began promoting digital ID systems, and praised India as a leader in deploying the technology.

Gates said:

"...the cost of bank branches and paperwork it's just too high but fortunately starting with countries like Kenya and more recently...India we see that you can have digital financial inclusion... so the role of the Gates Foundation as an advocate for those who don't have access today is to make sure there's technology and standards including open source work uh that we're providing through the financial switch which is called mojo loop and through the digital identity system which is extremely valuable not just for financial activities but for health and voting and education...there isn't going to be a one-size-fits-all solution what is the role that you see the private sector playing in being able to collaborate with different governments to ensure that we move forward well once you have the digital money system...”

The “digital money system” of which Gates was speaking is the other piece of the totalitarian nightmare being contemplated by the U.S. government, which would be tied to a universal digital ID, Central Bank Digital Currency (CBDC). CBDC would replace all cash and private bank accounts with a system of debits and credits run by the Federal Reserve, which could then be linked to such abominations as a “social credit score” such as the Chinese government maintains on almost all its citizens. In China social credit scores determine all facets of daily life, such as which schools one can attend, how far one can travel, what one can buy, and where one can go.

People who are determined to be engaging in “anti-social” behavior, such as the Canadian truckers protesting COVID vaccine mandates, can find their access to their own digital “money” summarily suspended, and left to starve.

Through an open letter, Access Now, Privacy International, NYU researchers, and other civil society organizations are calling on the World Bank to cease supporting unchecked digital ID systems that enable surveillance, exclusion, and discrimination.”

And of the sure-to-be-linked CBDC system, none other than the president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis, Neel Kashkari, warns of CBDC’s danger to democracy. Kashkari says CBDC would allow the federal government to “monitor every one of your transactions.”

Says Kashkari:

"I get why China would be interested. Why would the American people be for that?"

WEF Pushes Ban on Home-Grown Food to 'Fight Climate Change'

Frank Bergman March 1, 2024

The World Economic Forum (WEF) is calling on governments to ban the general public from growing their own food at home by arguing that they are causing “climate change.” According to so-called “experts” behind a recent WEF study, researchers apparently discovered that the “carbon footprint” of home-grown food is “destroying the planet.” [Nonsense and insanity reigns supreme!]

As a result, the WEF and other globalist climate zealots are now demanding that governments intervene and ban individuals from growing their own food in order to “save the planet” from “global warming.”

The research indicated that resorting to garden-to-table produce causes a far greater carbon footprint than conventional agricultural practices, such as rural farms.

This research, conducted by WEF-funded scientists at the University of Michigan, was published in the journal Nature Cities.

The study looked at different types of urban farms to see how much carbon dioxide (CO2) was produced when growing food. On average, a serving of food made from traditional farms creates 0.07 kilogram (kg) of CO2, according to the study.

However, the WEF-funded researchers claim that the impact on the environment is almost five times higher at 0.34kg per portion for individual city gardens.

The paper’s first author Jake Hawes said:

“The most significant contributor to carbon emissions on the urban agriculture sites we studied was the infrastructure used to grow the food, from raised beds to garden sheds to pathways, these constructions had a lot of carbon invested in their construction.”

The study recruited 73 urban agriculture sites around the world. Those farms included some in Europe, the United States, and the United Kingdom. The researchers say they conducted a comprehensive life cycle assessment on the site’s infrastructure, irrigation, and supplies.

Hawes and his teammates grouped urban agriculture sites into three categories: individual or family gardens, including allotments; collective gardens, such as community gardens; and larger, commercial-orientated urban farms.

The researchers also found other factors that they claimed are “hazardous” when it comes to impacting the alleged “climate crisis.” Poorly managed compost and other synthetic inputs contribute to “global warming,” they warned.

They further advised that fruit was 8.6 times more “eco-friendly” when grown conventionally compared to in a city. Vegetables, meanwhile, were 5.8 times better for the environment when left to the professionals, they claim.

Moreover, two-thirds of the “carbon footprint” of allotments is created by the garden itself, as per their data.

Nevertheless, they insist that people should be limited when it comes to keeping plants inside their homes, as well as growing food in their gardens. Urban gardeners used to have no qualms about greening their indoor spaces.

For one, this reduces city living anxieties and emotional stress. Also, being able to take care of plants inside their offices and homes could be part of interior design and a slight improvement in air quality.

However, climate alarmists are not going to give city dwellers peace of mind. According to the WEF researchers, greening indoor spaces can also come at an environmental cost. They cite “carbon emissions” from the trucks that transport plants, plastic pots, and synthetic fertilizers. These, they said, are made from petroleum and the harvesting of soil components like peat can “tear up slow-forming habitats.”

Susan Pell, the director of the U.S. Botanic Garden in Washington, D.C., downplayed the narrative. Pell argues that members of the general public should at least still be able to grow potted plants at home, even if they can’t buy them.

They just need to consider the “environmental harm of indoor gardening,” she claims. The news comes amid a growing war against the food supply to supposedly fight “global warming.”

As Slay News reported, 14 major American cities have set a “target” to comply with the WEF’s green agenda goals by banning meat and dairy products by 2030. The agreement also seeks to ban private car ownership and place other restrictions on public freedoms to meet the WEF’s “Net Zero” goals.

The U.S. cities have formed a coalition called the “C40 Cities Climate Leadership Group” (C40) which has established an “ambitious target” to meet the WEF’s goals by the year 2030.

To fulfill the “target,” the C40 Cities have pledged that their residents will comply with the following list of mandatory rules:

- “0 kg [of] meat consumption”
- “0 kg [of] dairy consumption”
- “3 new clothing items per person per year”
- “0 private vehicles” owned
- “1 short-haul return flight (less than 1500 km) every 3 years per person”

Earlier this week, New York’s anti-Trump Democrat Attorney General Letitia James advanced this agenda by filing a lawsuit against the world’s largest beef producer, as Slay News reported. Fear of being sued will help advance HRH Charles “Net Zero” agenda. We have seen that with all the bogus law suits against Trump the past four years. He has spent millions to defend himself in court! NY AG James is suing JBS USA over claims the company has failed to meet its so-called “Net Zero” pledge.

The get-Trump prosecutor accuses JBS of allegedly contributing to “global greenhouse gas emissions” as “families continue to face the daily impacts of the climate crisis.” In an announcement, James blasted the agriculture industry and argued that beef production has the largest “greenhouse gas footprint” of any major food commodity. James also claimed that animal agriculture accounts for 14.5% of global greenhouse gas emissions.

Essentially, the taxpaying masses must stop eating meat and using natural fuels to meet the goals of the elite.

Billionaires’ Survivalist Bunkers Go Absolutely Bonkers With Fiery Moats and Water Cannons

Amid 'World War III' fears, apocalypse-fearing moguls are investing millions in survival strategies including rotating fireplaces out of 'Indiana Jones' and heightened tactical systems.

A moat that can be set on fire surrounds a house conceived by bunker maker SAFE RENDERING BY ROGER BERENT ARCHITECTS/COURTESY OF SAFE

On the heels of Sam Esmail’s apocalyptic thriller Leave the World Behind and December news reports that Mark Zuckerberg is constructing a 5,000-square-foot bunker under his ranch on the island of Kauai, the business of fortified shelters is booming.

Adding more fuel to the flames: escalating armed conflict around the globe and, closer to home, the ongoing onslaught of mass shootings and an increasingly fractious political landscape leading up to the presidential election on Nov. 5.

The one-percenters who can afford to pull out all the stops for self-preservation are doing so more than ever — often in a fashion that goes way beyond the submerged corrugated metal units seen on reality shows like Nat Geo's Doomsday Preppers.

Aiming to protect themselves from potential threats including civil unrest, cyberattacks, nuclear bombing, power grid failure and drastic climate-change events, many work directly with general contractors to build kitted-out end-times bunkers, while others call on a handful of specialized companies.

"It got really busy, and it seems like the phone hasn't stopped ringing; World War III seems like it's coming," shares Ron Hubbard, CEO of Texas-based Atlas Survival Shelters, who notes that the news about Zuckerberg's bunker "caused a buying frenzy." He's currently constructing a $7.5 million bunker for a client in Oklahoma that is in the design phase.

An escape tunnel designed by SAFE. SAFE

Robert Vicino, founder of Del Mar, California-based Vivos, which creates underground survival shelters, agrees: "Now that Zuckerberg has let the cat out of the bag, that's got other people who share his status or are near his status starting to think, 'Oh God, if he's doing that, maybe he knows something that I don't, maybe I should seek this out myself.' But it's no secret that the one-percenters and top-ranking government officials have been in on this bunker idea for a long-ass time. The pandemic was a huge driver of interest in sales; then all the global concerns and issues at home are another boost. We're here to provide peace-of-mind solutions." Other moguls enamored by bunkers include billionaire and former Paypal CEO Peter Thiel — whose attempts to build one in New Zealand were nixed in 2022 — and Bill Gates who is rumored to have underground security areas under every one of his homes.

Al Corbi, president and founder of Virginia-based SAFE (Strategically Armored & Fortified Environments), which caters to custom designs for the uber-rich, notes that many billionaires are particularly focused on how to survive power grid failures, including buying cars and planes that are less reliant on computer interfaces. "A lot of these guys are buying up King Air or older planes that don't have the electronic avionics, and keeping one or two older cars built before 1986 in their collection, so they'll still function in an EMP [electromagnetic pulse]. The newness is it's shifting from the idea of nuclear ka-boom to protection against local threats. The real threat is the power grid, which is ironically the plot of Leave The World Behind. In situations like this, sustaining your life is as important as food and water."

A 400-square-foot Platinum Series modular steel bunker from Atlas Survival Shelters.

The average shelter that Hubbard sells “on a daily basis” — consisting of a prefab modular steel bunker — is in the $200,000 to $400,000 range (“It’s like buying a Ferrari,” he says) and 50 percent of Atlas Survival Shelters clients are women. (Hubbard appeared on an episode of the final season of Keeping Up With The Kardashians in 2021 in which Kim and Khloé Kardashian tested out one of his 500-square-foot, $200,000 bunkers.)

Due to global demand, bunker air filtration systems (which run $3,000-$10,000) are becoming scarce, says Hubbard, so he bought up 711 of them in December (more than he has purchased in the past 13 years combined) to keep up with growing clamor. He says that the company is currently working with two billionaire customers in the U.S., “both related to Facebook,” but their bunkers cap out below $500,000.

At the highest end, “I hear there are a couple of big bunkers being built in the United States in the $5 to $10 million range,” adds Hubbard, who is currently constructing a $5 million bunker for a client in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, that will also house his car collection.

Corbi — who worked on the palatial 27-floor, $4.8 billion Mumbai residence of business mogul Mukesh Ambani of Reliance Industries — reveals to THR that his most spectacular project, due to be completed in 2025, is an island fortress created on a 200-acre property in the U.S., with cutting-edge tactical systems.

“The shelter can withstand a blast one mile from ground zero,” says Corbi. “But that was almost incidental. The client [a business mogul] was saying, ‘I want to make sure that no one can get to my family,’ so we wound up literally building a 30-foot-deep lake [around the compound] skimmed with a lighter-than-water flammable liquid that can transform into a ring of fire. The only access to the island is a swing bridge.”

Also at Corbi’s project, “there are water cannons that can take down parachuters, Apache helicopters, whatever’s coming your way 500 feet in the air,” he says. “Then we took all the dirt removed for the lake to literally build a mountain as natural fortification around the property. And we cut a tunnel through with flame-throwers, gassing systems, a steel wall that closes midway that could stop a 16-wheeler going 80 miles an hour, and bollards at both ends.”

The bells and whistles actually can double as everyday fun. According to Corbi, friends of the owner might enjoy a flag football game on jet skis, dodging the water cannons’ ability to lock in and blow them off the skis, creating “a mind-boggling adult Nintendo game, a wild entertainment factor,” he describes, adding that the cannons can also blow rainbows into the air as a backdrop to a barbecue or create rainfall on a sunny day. The site preparation alone cost millions of dollars, “a fraction of the cost of the overall project,” says Corbi, who sees a trend of clients with existing bunkers requesting add-on tactical defense components to the tune of about a million dollars to upgrade.

A rendering of SAFE's under-construction project — that includes a moat with a flammable liquid on the surface — depicts an imagined attack on the property. ROGER BERENT ARCHITECTS

The next-level question becomes where to go if something somehow happens to the primary shelter. Elaborate tunnels systems that route people to alternate bunkers offer a backup plan, plus “all types of extraction devices and systems, but that really isn't something I can talk about; let's just say, on all the super-yachts, there are helicopters and submarines,” says Corbi.

Fueled by the pandemic and clients with existing medical conditions, SAFE has partnered with Virginia medical consulting company Vital RN, founded by Corbi's wife Naomi, a registered nurse, to offer state-of-the-art decontaminant booths, medical supplies and rooms with full operating tables in bunkers.

“We installed one on Long Island, and you feel like you are in the best-equipped Cedars-Sinai or Cleveland Clinic operating room!” says Corbi. “You can have every drug imaginable that you could possibly need locked in cabinets that can only be opened remotely by a physician, so it's all within the confines of the law.”

When it comes to secret passageways and hidden doors, many turn to Arizona-based Creative Home Engineering, where a door can cost more than $50,000 a pop. “I'm wrapping a project for a client in the Phoenix area that includes nine secret doors that didn't spare any expense,” says Creative Home Engineering president Steve Humble. “He has an underground shooting range accessed by this massive fireplace that rotates like the one in Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade. Then there's a giant staircase that raises up to reveal a big basement, where a vehicle elevator goes down to the garage. We also installed a British phone booth. When you dial 867-5309 on the receiver, the song plays and the glass turns opaque so you disappear; then the back wall opens up and there is actually a slide that takes you two levels down where there's a flight simulator, and a sensor causes the back panel of the booth to return and the glass goes transparent, so nobody can understand how you got out of there. The house also happens to have a giant shark tank in the basement that shares one wall with the swimming pool, so it looks like you are swimming with sharks. And the pool is more like a water park, with a flow river, a lazy river, a grotto and a glass bottom, so you can see a go-cart track underneath the pool. This guy's got all the toys! He has a safe room and we did one secret door that's exclusively for security, but the rest is mostly just for showing off."

A medical room designed by SAFE. SAFE

A rotating fireplace leads to an underground bunker, designed by Creative Home Engineering. CREATIVE HOME ENGINEERING

Yet Humble says that the majority of his approximately 100 current custom and standard projects are focused on security. "In cities like L.A., the homeless-slash-crime epidemic getting out of control seems to be a recurring theme lately, so people are getting serious about security," he says. "I have a project in Colorado with nine ballistic, armored pocket doors, because they need to be able to lock down the house at any time. I'm also doing security vault doors for several famous people." (Notably, violent crime in Los Angeles declined by double-digit percentages in 2023 compared to the previous year.)

In January, Creative Home Engineering released a new off-the-shelf Vault Mirror Secret Door, that appears to be a full-length mirror, for just $6,000. "That's about the same price as a regular vault door, but this one has camouflage," he says. "A lot of famous people make the mistake of having a safe, which is almost like having a neon sign in your house that says, 'This is where I keep my valuables.' So people break in and know where to focus their efforts, using basic tools like a crowbar. Until now, if you wanted a secret door that was also a bulletproof vault door for forced entry protection, it was a custom job that cost about $20,000, so this is an exciting development."

Another client called on Creative Home Engineering to build "an underground museum in his basement involving multiple secret doors to access the room and inner sanctum," says Humble, to securely store a collection of extremely rare cards (worth about $250,000 each), with the designs on the cards ornately carved in the display cabinetry.

The Vault Mirror Secret Door by Creative Home Engineering. CREATIVE HOME ENGINEERING

Mike Peters, owner of Utah-based Ultimate Bunker (which also does business in Nevada and California) has found a niche in safe rooms that start at around $50,000 for an 8-foot by 8-foot space with an additional $30,000 for every window. The safe rooms' electric and bulletproof doors open with a key fob or a fingerprint. "A lot of people in Hollywood have had their homes broken into, so they need somewhere to go in the middle of the night right by their bedroom or to put their whole bedroom on lockdown," says Peters, noting that his bunker business is also booked out for well over a year. "We can fortify any room, and we've got people who want to be able to pull their car in the garage and run inside and have peace of mind, if somebody is on their tail."

In the security business, privacy is paramount, but there are always exceptions.

"In 50 years, we've never had a client harmed or their possessions compromised, so we pick our clients as much as they pick us," says Corbi. "I was called for an initial consultation with the builder who was working on Brad Pitt and Jennifer Aniston's house back when they were together, and I did a risk assessment of the property. If you could have seen what their builder was building — it was so bad that I had to turn the job down. I'm not exaggerating. Where the roof comes down and touches the floor, he built a wall along that, so they had to get down on their hands and knees and crawl the whole length of it and jump almost a story down into the lawn and run over to the neighbor's house. You would have to have been a rat on adrenaline for that thing to work!"

Dr. Lee Merritt began her medical career at the age of four, carrying her father's "black bag" on house-calls, along the back roads of Iowa. In 1980 she graduated from the University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry in New York, where she was elected to life membership in the Alpha Omega Alpha Honor Medical Society. Dr. Merritt completed an Orthopedic Surgery Residency in the United States Navy and served Over 10 years as a Navy physician and surgeon. In 1989 she was the only woman to be appointed as the Louis A. Goldstein Fellow of Spinal Surgery at the University of Rochester, Strong Memorial Hospital.

My reason for sharing this post from Dr. Lee Merritt's web page 'The Medical Rebel' has to do with the truth about Covid-19 and the lies we have been fed for the past four years. In the link she confirms that the test for whether a person had the alleged Covid virus was, in fact, patented in 2015 by one Richard Rothschild; patented in Denmark and the U.S. simultaneously. This begs the question, how can you have a test for a so-called virus that did not officially exist until five years later.

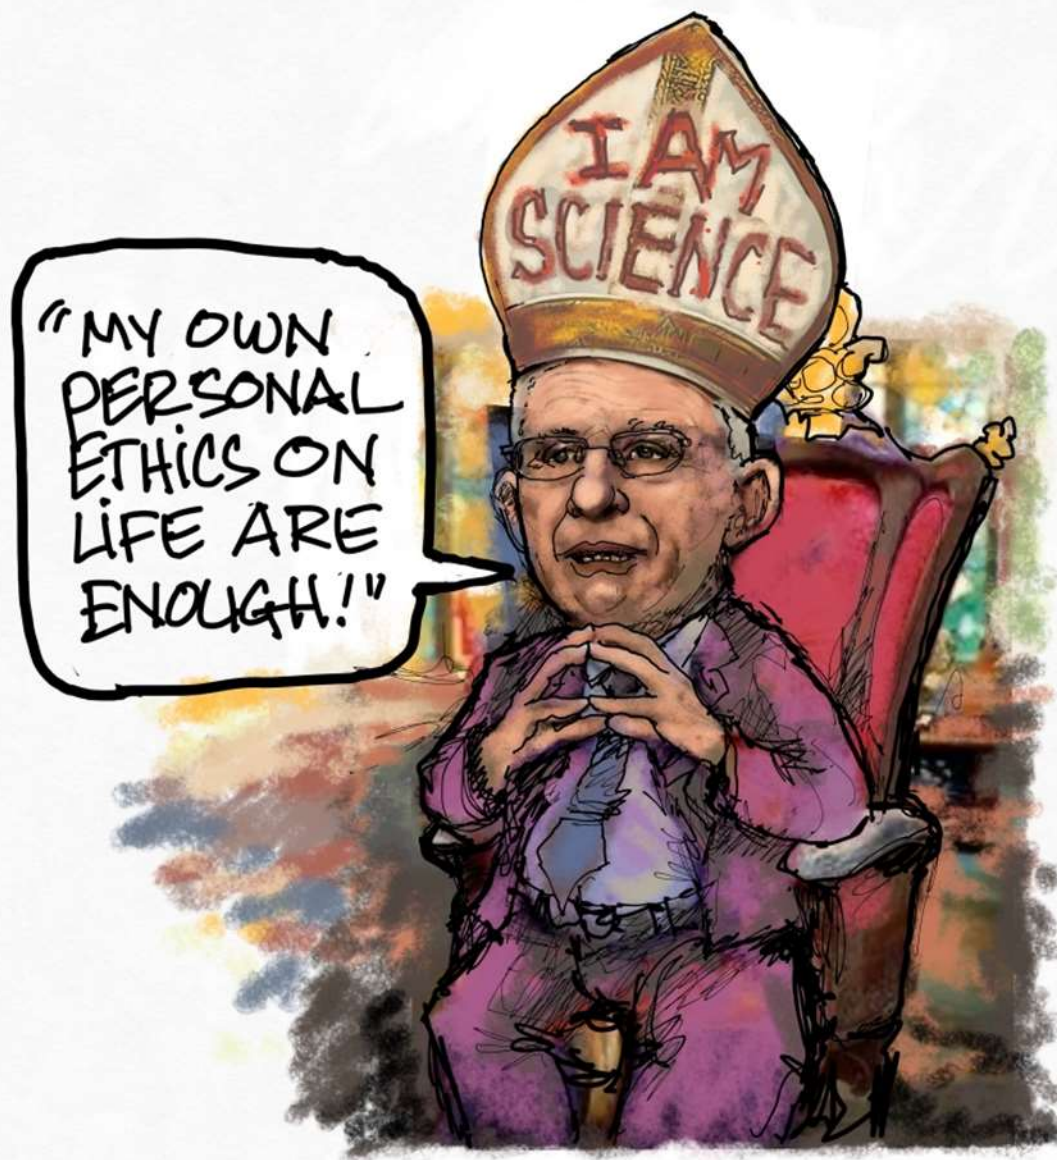

Two days ago I posted an article on my web page:

The content of this article was largely written by Susan Bradford who addresses the Rothschild "Depopulation" agenda, and their gaining control over the world. That article under pins the centuries-long plan to depopulate the planet. Suffice to say, Covid-19 was not a virus, but rather a plan to maim and kill as many people as possible.

Dr. Lee Merritt's video presentation further elaborates details of the scam or hoax to deceive humanity into being fear-mongered to comply with the so-called (fake) science. As Dr. Merritt discusses, there are no such thing as a "Virus". There are parasites, fungus, bacteria, toxins, poisons, and pathogens but there is no such thing as a virus.

The likes of Dr. Anthony Fauci and his colleagues controlled the narrative spread by the media for the past fifty years, and in leading the public to believe the government cares about the public health, were being led to the slaughter through fear and ignorance. Their grand plan was executed with control of the media, public health, and financial compensation for their participation in the deception of the global public. The government paid billions in compensation to hospitals and physicians to lie about patients having a "rogue novel virus!"

Four years ago, I was reading the work of one Dr. Stefan Lanka. He was saying that “viruses” do not exist and they could not be transmissible from person to person. He provided proof positive in a legal case in a German court that the measles is not a virus.

The virus misconception is at the heart of Operation Coronavirus, because without the concept of germ theory and without the horror story of the killer virus, most people would not buy the NWO-directed official narrative of COVID propaganda. In a previous article on the nature of the virus, I have discussed the heroic efforts of German virologist Dr. Stefan Lanka, who won a landmark case in 2017 which went all the way to the German Supreme Court. Lanka proved in the highest court of the land that measles was not caused by a virus, and that there was in fact no such thing as a measles virus. Lanka is still busy working, and he wrote this article earlier this year (translated into English here) entitled ““The Misconception called Virus”” in which he explains the history of how mainstream science went horribly wrong with its conclusions (really assumptions) to demonize the humble virus and to falsely ascribe pathogenicity to it when there is none.

The Virus Misconception: The Killer Virus Story vs. Deficiency and Toxicity

Lanka’s main point throughout the article is this: when modern scientists are working with diseased tissue, they think the presence of a virus is causing the disease, instead of realizing that the tissue in question has been cut off and isolated from its host, then doused with antibiotics, and that this separation and poison make it diseased and kill it, rather than any virus. Lanka writes:

“All claims about viruses as pathogens are wrong and are based on easily recognizable, understandable and verifiable misinterpretations ... All scientists who think they are working with viruses in laboratories are actually working with typical particles of specific dying tissues or cells which were prepared in a special way. They believe that those tissues and cells are dying because they were infected by a virus. In reality, the infected cells and tissues were dying because they were starved and poisoned as a consequence of the experiments in the lab.”

” ... the death of the tissue and cells takes place in the exact same manner when no “infected” genetic material is added at all. The virologists have apparently not noticed this fact. According to ... scientific logic and the rules of scientific conduct, control experiments should have been carried out. In order to confirm the newly discovered method of so-called “virus propagation” ... scientists would have had to perform additional experiments, called negative control experiments, in which they would add sterile substances ... to the cell culture.”

“These control experiment have never been carried out by the official “science” to this day. During the measles virus trial, I commissioned an independent laboratory to perform this control experiment and the result was that the tissues and cells die due to the laboratory conditions in the exact same way as when they come into contact with alleged “infected” material.”

In other words, the studied cells and tissues die with or without the presence of a virus in exactly the same way; therefore, the virus cannot be the cause of the morbidity and mortality. Interestingly, this is exactly what many health experts have stated, namely that there are only 2 causes of disease: deficiency and toxicity. For instance, Charlotte Gerson (who took over running the Gerson Clinic from her brilliant father Max) said this about disease and cancer. Removing cells or tissue from the body and thus cutting them off from their energy/nutrient supply will quickly lead to deficiency; injecting antibiotics into the mixture is toxicity; thus there is no solid proof a virus is causing disease when there is already deficiency and toxicity present. This is the key point of the virus misconception.

How the Virus Misconception Has Roots in 1858 and Became Entrenched in 1954

Lanka traces back the development of the virus misconception to 1858 and to the 'cell theory' of Rudolf Virchow, who proposed a theory that all disease and all life originates from a single cell, which is somehow hijacked by a virus that weakens it and propagates itself. Lanka points out 2 problems with this:

"The cell theory was only originated because Rudolf Virchow suppressed crucial discoveries about tissues. The findings and insights with respect to the structure, function and central importance of tissues in the creation of life, which were already known in 1858, comprehensively refute the cell theory and the subsequently derived genetic, immune and cancer therapies."

"The infection theories were only established as a global dogma through the concrete policies and eugenics of the Third Reich. Before 1933, scientists dared to contradict this theory; after 1933, these critical scientists were silenced."

By "infection theories" Lanka means germ theory, the prevailing theory of modern Western Medicine. Lanka then describes how a paradigm shift in the perception of the virus occurred during 1952-1954:

"Until 1952, a virus was defined as a pathogenic poison in the form of a protein, which as an enzyme caused damage in an unknown manner, which could cause disease and be transmissible. After 1953, the year in which the alleged DNA in the form [of] an alleged alpha helix was publicly announced, the idea of a virus became a malignant genotype wrapped in proteins. Thus, a paradigm shift took place between 1952 and 1954 regarding the image of a virus."

He talks about how theory become dogma in the Church of Mainstream Science (aka Scientism):

"This completely unscientific approach originated in June 1954, when an unscientific and refutable speculative article was published, according to which the death of tissue in a test tube was considered ... possible evidence for the presence of a virus. Six months later, on 10 December 1954, the main author of this opinion was awarded the Nobel Prize for Medicine for another equally speculative theory. The speculation from June 1954 was then raised to a scientific fact and became a dogma which has never been challenged to this date. Since June 1954, the death of tissue and cells in a test tube has been regarded as proof for the existence of a virus."

Returning to Koch's Postulates: No Isolation, No Purification

As I covered in COVID-19 Umbrella Term to Operate a Fake Pandemic: Not 1 Disease, Not 1 Cause, today's mainstream scientists are skipping the all-important 2nd step of Koch's postulates: the isolation and purification of the virus. This isn't something you can just gloss over or forget to do, like accidentally forgetting your umbrella on a rainy day and getting a bit wet. This is the absolutely quintessential part of determining if there is a new virus and if it is causing disease. It's the sine qua non. If you can't isolate it, you have FAILED to prove anything, because the budding offshoot you think is an invading virus could easily be a exosome or particle being produced by the body itself. This is why all the COVID propaganda has conveniently glossed over the fact that there are no electron microscope images of SARS-CoV-2, since the electron microscope is an extremely important tool in the 1st step of Koch's postulates, the identification. Lanka continues:

"... a virus has never been isolated according to the meaning of the word isolation, and it has never been photographed and biochemically characterized as a whole unique structure. The electron micrographs of the alleged viruses show in reality quite normal cellular particles from dying tissues and cells, and most photos show only a computer model (CGI – computer generated images)."

So What Does All This Have to Do with COVID?

So to bring this back to the current plandemic, all of the same assumptions and lack of evidence are in play when it comes to COVID:

"Individual molecules are extracted from the particles of dead tissue and cells, they are misinterpreted to be parts of a virus and are theoretically put together into a virus model ... The consensus-finding process for the measles "virus", in which the participants debated in order to determine what belonged to the virus and what didn't, lasted for decades. With the apparently new China Coronavirus 2019 (2019-nCoV, meanwhile renamed), this consensus-finding process lasts only a few mouse clicks.

With only a few mouse clicks as well, a program can create any virus by putting together molecules of short parts of nucleic acids from dead tissue and cells with a determined biochemical composition, thus arranging them as desired into a longer genotype which is then declared to be the complete genome of the new virus ... in this process of theoretical construction of the "viral DNA", those sequences that don't fit are "smoothed out" and missing ones are added. Thus, a DNA sequence is invented which doesn't exist in reality and which was never discovered and scientifically demonstrated as a whole."

So basically, mainstream Chinese scientists who work under the same theory as mainstream Western scientists invented a new theoretical model for SARS-CoV-2, and proclaimed a novel coronavirus, but all without the electron micrographs to actually back it up.

This entire process has extremely interesting parallels with the theme of space fakery, whether it's propagated by NASA or the space agencies of other nations. We don't have verifiable images of viruses; we don't have verifiable whole (non-composite) images of the Earth, or many other space bodies such as moons, planets, etc. Instead we are fed CGIs and told not to question authority. Is this science or is this faith-based Scientism? To what extent are we being manipulated when we are denied real and true photographs of the world around us, both on a micro and macro level? I would argue to a massive extent.

Lanka on the Danger of Vaccines

Our lack of understanding about viruses, disease, the immune system, terrain theory and much more is exploited by Big Pharma to push dangerous medical interventions such as vaccines. Here's what Lanka has to say about the danger and ineffectiveness of vaccines:

"[A] concoction consisting of dying tissue and cells from monkeys, bovine fetuses and toxic antibiotics ... is being used as a "live" vaccine, because it is supposed to consist of so-called "attenuated" viruses ... [this] toxic mixture full of foreign proteins, foreign nucleic acids (DNA/RNA), cytotoxic antibiotics, microbes and spores of all types is being labelled a "live vaccine." It is implanted in children through vaccination mainly into the muscles, in a quantity which if it were injected into the veins would immediately lead to certain death ... The verifiable facts demonstrate the danger and negligence of these scientists and politicians, who claim that vaccines are safe, have little or no side-effects, and would protect from a disease. None of these claims is true and scientific, on the contrary: upon precise scientific analysis, one finds that vaccines are useless and the respective literature admits to the lack of any evidence in their favor."

Final Thoughts

The virus misconception has been with us a long time. As insane as the current fear-based, mask-wearing, social-distancing submission is, there are those people who are using Operation Coronavirus as a chance to wake up. While some go deeper into unconsciousness and look to new protective products ("upgrade your mask for our patent-pending powered air-filtration protective shield (N95)"), others have seen the coronavirus coup for what it truly is: a chance to roll out all kinds of control architecture while people sleepwalk in fear. It is always a good idea to question the base assumptions of any governmental pronouncement, because almost always, it can open up a portal that leads to the truth.

If Not a Virus then what is it?

This is where the story gets interesting. A short answer is that it is a matter of wireless energy, waves and frequencies. Dr. Lee Merritt's presents the big picture behind what the public have been deceived into believing. Do watch Dr. Merritt's video linked above.

World Economic Forum (WEF) founder Klaus Schwab is pushing a new technology that allows human beings to be replaced by machines.

According to Schwab, a person's brain can now be "replicated" using an "algorithm" so that the person's physical body can "die" and they can "live on" as artificial intelligence (AI). [This appears to be the "Immortality" mode for the Antichrist Beast System. I have said for a long time now going back as far as 2000 that the Biblical false messiah would one day use to rival that which the Bible refers to as "eternal life". Keep in mind the Antichrist cannot create life; he counterfeits everything the True Messiah is capable of doing in the Bible.]

Schwab said the technology means a person's body will be replaced by an "avatar" so they live in the so-called "metaverse" instead of the real world. [Technology sells big with contemporary man. I expect that HRH Charles and Klaus Schwab will sell well their counterfeit of "eternal life". Keep in mind that many wealthy individuals already have bought into the science of "cryogenics".

"Cryogenics humans" is the term for the low-temperature freezing and storage of human remains, with the hope that resurrection may be possible in the future. The process starts when a person is declared dead and involves keeping the blood pumping, packing the body in ice, and injecting chemicals to reduce blood clotting. Cryonics is an extreme form of cryopreservation, which is a technique for storing living cells at ultra-low temperatures.

Amid the hot desert landscape of Scottsdale, Arizona, some people would rather be frozen—literally.

To date, 199 people have had their heads and bodies cryopreserved at the Alcor Life Extension Foundation facility in hopes of being revived later. By preserving bodies at below-freezing temperatures, Alcor's goal is "restoring good health with medical technology in the future," according to the non-profit organization's website. Packed together, cylindrical tanks filled with liquid nitrogen hold the heads and bodies of human "patients"—as the foundation calls them—plus about 100 preserved pets, reports Liliana Salgado for Reuters.

Some of the patients had terminal cases of diseases that lack a present-day cure, such as cancer or ALS. Max More, former CEO of Alcor who now serves as an ambassador and president emeritus of the foundation, tells Reuters that modern medicine and technology are insufficient to keep people alive as they're nearing death.

"We're saying instead of just disposing of the patient, give them to us," More tells Reuters. "We're going to stabilize them, stop them getting worse and hold them for as long as it takes for technology to catch up and allow them to come back to life and continue living."

Several medical and legal professionals have long been skeptical of human cryopreservation—or hostile to it, Peter Wilson reported for the New York Times last year. Clive Coen, a neuroscientist at King's College London in England, tells MIT

Technology Review's Laurie Clarke that cryonics is “a hopeless aspiration that reveals an appalling ignorance of biology.”

But for those that participate, the cryopreservation process begins as soon as a person is declared legally dead, according to Alcor's website. At this time, their organs are still viable. Acting quickly, a cryonics team that has usually been on standby, awaiting the patient's death for up to a week, moves them to an ice bath and replaces their blood with an organ-preserving solution. Once the patient arrives at Alcor's Arizona facility, the team releases cryoprotectants, or chemicals that prevent the formation of ice crystals that may damage organs, into the patient's bloodstream. Alcor cools the body to minus 320.8 degrees Fahrenheit and stores it in a tank filled with liquid nitrogen.

Here's the catch: No cryonics organization knows how to bring life back to its preserved patients. Per Alcor's website, the non-profit has “confidence revival may be possible.”

Founded in 1972, Alcor performed its first human cryopreservation in 1976. But the first-ever human to be frozen like this was preserved nearly a decade prior, when psychologist James H. Bedford died in 1967 at age 73 from kidney cancer. Bedford's body was put on ice and processed by “experts from the Cryonics Society of California,” as ‘The New York Times’ Magazine wrote in 1997. Bedford's body has been frozen ever since and now rests in one of Alcor's tanks.

The youngest of the patients at Alcor is two-year-old Matheryn Naovaratpong, a Thai girl with brain cancer, who was cryopreserved in 2015, reports Reuters.

“Both her parents were doctors, and she had multiple brain surgeries,” More tells the publication. “Nothing worked, unfortunately. So, they contacted us.”

Other patients at the facility include software developer and Bitcoin pioneer Hal Finney, who died in 2014 from ALS, and baseball Hall of Famer Ted Williams, who died in 2002 from heart disease complications. Cryopreservation for an entire body at Alcor costs at least $200,000, and it costs $80,000 to preserve just a brain, per Reuters.】

While addressing fellow globalists, Schwab noted that the technology will be necessary “for the public good” after his “Great Reset” agenda has been rolled out.

The WEF chairman unveiled the plans during a meeting with fellow globalists of the Global Shapers Community. Global Shapers was founded by Schwab and the WEF in 2012. It brings together anti-humanists under the age of 30 who have been identified by WEF as potential leaders.

Author Ernst Wolff believes it is a proving ground where future political leaders are being selected, vetted, and groomed before being positioned in the world's political apparatus.

It is akin to a WEF indoctrination program just as is WEF's Young Global Leaders, which includes multiple world leaders including Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau.

"You have the chance to look forward to a career of 50 years," Schwab told the Global Shapers at a private WEF session.

"Maybe more, you will get some injections and so on. Don't forget your avatar will continue to live and your brain will be replicated through artificial intelligence and algorithms. So, we don't know, but at least 50 years."

It's not clear why the Global Shapers in the audience clapped and laughed at Schwab's idea of extending their lives with avatars, algorithms, and injections. His is truly a dystopian plan as we explain later in this article.

If they knew what Schwab and his collaborators had in store for them and had any common sense or self-respect they would have chosen to throw rotten eggs at him. A few months after his seemingly entertaining chat to the Global Shapers, Schwab was again plugging avatars with the help of his partners, Accenture and Microsoft.

In January 2023, the WEF launched its working version of the metaverse called the Global Collaboration Village.

At a Global Collaboration Village press conference with Julie Sweet, Accenture Chair and Chief Executive Officer, and Brad Smith, Microsoft Vice-Chair and President, Schwab said:

"For me [it was] the first experience to use an avatar. I got so fast accustomed to it so I am fascinated by the capabilities which we have ... For me, this is the next phase, the next big phase of development in the virtual world. And we are very proud that together with our partners, we can work on creating the first use of this technology for the public good."

The metaverse is a technological concept centered around virtual and augmented reality. It has the ominous capability to become a breeding ground for censorship, unbridled surveillance, and an insidious form of digital enslavement, surpassing anything humanity has ever encountered.

And, the World Economic Forum has been taking steps to have control over it. Schwab succinctly conveyed the organization's ambitions for the metaverse during a speech in February 2023 at the appropriately titled World Government Summit.

In his address, Schwab proclaimed that those who gain mastery over new technologies, including the metaverse, will wield a significant degree of influence over the world's affairs.

“We are at the beginning, when you look at it, at technology transformation, it usually takes place in the terms of an S-curve,” he said.

“And we are just now where we move into the exponential phase. And I agree, artificial intelligence, but not only artificial intelligence, but also the metaverse, new space technologies, and I could go on and on, synthetic biology. Our life in 10 years from now will be completely different, very much affected, and who masters those technologies, in some way, will be the master of the world.”

Should the WEF’s vision materialize – an extensively controlled metaverse permeating nearly every facet of society – the unelected WEF would bring to fruition Schwab’s vision: the WEF, in some manner, would wield mastery over the world through its role in governing the metaverse. Throughout the week of WEF’s 2024 annual meeting, more than 200 participants engaged at the virtual Global Collaboration Village.

It’s surprising it was that many. But then again, 140 organizations have joined the Village Partners community and perhaps people were obliged by their employers to show some interest.

That being the case, WEF’s Global Collaboration Village seems to be proving a flop. Hopefully, the Global Shapers will see it the same way. I’m not trying to be morbid here but since I have been diagnosed with Bladder Cancer, I am relying on the simplicity of trusting in the God of Creation Who has offered Eternal Life in Him. “Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me” -(John 14:6).
